XM provides us with instant traffic and weather for several cities any time we need it. We have the chance to reroute if needed. It saves time and it saves fuel. My truck gets much better miles per gallon at a steady 55 than stop and go in a traffic jam. Are we not trying to conserve fuel in this country? By the time you pick up some static AM station (if you even know where to tune) you are too close to the area to make any changes in routeing. WE pay for XM Radio, I don't hear anyone complaining about the weather channel on cable TV and saying we have to watch local channels for our weather--which is usually only on two or three times a day. I think there are plenty of things in this country that need attention but, my buying a service from XM that is a tool to help me better perform my job as a truck driver is NOT one of them Thank you.
